An other, that baptism was of none efficacy. The thirde, that there were two goddis, one god, and an other euill. And that of the god God proceeded god thinges, and of the euill God, euill thinges. The fowerth, that in hell were none other paynes than be in this worlde. The fift, that the generall iudgement is passe. The sixte, that it is not lesfull for any man to sweare. The seuenth, that man hath no freewill, called in latine Libertum arbitrium. The eight, that the mater, whereof the worlde was made, was not made of God, but is coeternal with God. The ninth, that there is no original sinne, and that childen be not bozne in original sinne. Also that sinne commeth not of freewill, but of the diuell. The tenth, they denied, that the body should estones arple at the daye of iudgement. The leuenth, they abieted al the olde testament as a vaine thing, and of none authoritie.

Albinus, The name of an Emperour. Also the surname of diuers Romaines.

Albion, and Bergion, Two gigantes the sonnes of Neptune, slaine by Hercules.

Albion, (The moste auncient name of this Ile) containeth Englands and Scotlande: of the beginning of which name haue ben sundrie opinions. One late feigned by him, whiche first printed the Englishe chronicle, wherein is neither similitude of trouthe, reason, nor honestie: I mean the fable of the fiftie daughters of one Dioclesian kyng of Syria, where neuer any other historie maketh mention of a kyng of Syria, so named. Also that name is Greke, and no parte of the language of Syria. Moreover the coming of them from Syria in a shippe or boate without any marynours throughte the sea called Mediterranean, into the ocean, and so finally to find this Ile, and to inhabite it, and haue generation by duels, is both impossible, and much reproch for this noble Realme, to ascribe hir first name and habitation, to suche inuentours. An other opinion is (whiche hath a moze honeste similitude) that it was named Albion, ab albis rupibus, white rockes, because that vnto them, that come by sea, from the east or southe, the bankes and rockes of this Ile doe appeare white. Of this opinion haue I moste meruaile, because it is written of great learned men. First Albion is no latin worde, nor hath the analogie, that is to say, the proportion or similitude of latine. If who hath founde this syllable, on, at the end of a latin word. And if it should haue ben so called for the white colour of the rockes, men would haue called it Ala, or Alus, or Alum. In Italy were townes called Alba, and in Asia countrey called Albania, and neither of them tolde their beginning of white rockes or walles, as ye may reade in booke of Geographie: nor the water of the river called Albis, semeth any whiter than other water. But if where auncient remembrance of the beginning of thinges lacketh, it may be lesfull for men to vse their conjectures, than may myne be as well accepted as Plinius.

Plinius (although he incomparably excelled me in wisdom & doctrine) specially if it may appere, that my cōiecture shal appoach moze nere to the similitude of trouth. Wherfoze I will also sette forth mine opinion, onely to the intent to exclude fables, lackyng eyther honestie or reasonable similitudes. When the Grekes began first to prosper, and their cities became populous, & wared puissant, they which trauailed on the seas, and also the yles in the seas, called Hellespontus, Aegium, and Cretica, after that they knewe perfectly the course of sailyng, and had founden thereby profyte, they by little and little attempted to serche & finde out the commodities of outwarde countreies: and like as Spaniards & Portugallies haue late done, they experienced to seeke out countreies before unknownen. And at laste passyng the streites of Sparrocke, they entered into the great Ocean sea, where they found dyuers and many Iles. Among which they perceiving this Ile to be not onely the greatest in circuite, but also most plentifulle of euery thing necessary to man, the ayre most holsonne and temperate, the earth most apte to bringe forth all thinges that maie sufficeine, the fleshe of beestes and fowles most swete and delicate, the soyle moste fine, not lacking any kinde of metall, haueing abundance of woodde and timber to bulde with, also great & fayre riuers, with great lakes or meres of freshe water, and as well in them as in the sea, wherewith the countrey is enuironed, was great plentie of fishes, of diuers sortes moste apt to be eaten: they wonderpunge & reioysinge at their god and fortunat arriual, named this yle in greke Ombion, which in englishe signifieth happy, in latine Polix, like as part of Arabia, which is most fertile, is called Arabia felix. But in pōcesse of time, by resort of sundrie people haueing diuers languages, no meruayle though one letter were chaunged, & the first letter, O, turned into A. And so for Ombion, it was at the laste called Albion, which worde hath no manner of signification. This chaunging of letters is not vnlkely, fēce at this presente time the northern men of this realme do vse A, in word, where southern men vse O, as a bane, a stane, a bare, a band: for a bone, a stōne, a boze, a bond. And among the Grekes were like alterations of letters. And it may be moze easily borne, y one towel may be chaunged in a word, & specially A, into O, whiche in somme mans mouth, soundeth often times like, thā that a syllable impertinent to the proportion of latine, should be vnaptly added to. Not withstandinge Pomponius Mela maketh mention of a gyauant called Albion, whom Hercules slew in Gallia, which was sonne of Aspetunus, who moughte with moze reaso be demed the first geuer of this name to this yle, than that the other surmises should be likely. If any man can finde matter moze certaine, concerning the beginning of this

Ile, I will not be offended, but congratulate with him his god fortune and diligence.

Ariſtides, A noble man of Athens, in wyſedome, iuſtice, and temperance, excellent. He in the gouernance of the common weale of Athens, was ioynded with Themistocles, a mā of great prouidence and ryches, who ſayed in the counſayle; he knew a thyng, whiche was expedient to the common weale, but not neceſſary to be openly knowen, and deſyꝛed to haue one appointed, to whom he ſhould diſcloſe it. The counſayle appointed Ariſtides: to whome he ſhewed, that the nauye of the Lacedemonians mought be ſhortly ſette on fyꝛe, and ſo ſhould theyꝝ prouidence bee abated. This hearde, Ariſtides returned to the counſayle, and ſayed: The aduiſe of Themistocles is profitable, but not honeſt. The Athenienſes hearinge it was not honeſt, iudged, it mought not bee profitable, and woulde not haue it than diſcloſed. Suche credence hadde they in Ariſtides. Alſo not withſtanding the Athenienſes had exiled hym, onely becauſe he excelled in iuſtice, yet at his departing he prayed to God, that what ſo euer they deſired, mought come to good eſſeate and concluſion. And called agayne from exyle, he neuer remembꝛed anye olde diſpleaſure, in ſo muche that he alwaye honoured Themistocles, with whom he euer contended in the weale publyke. ſf hys temperance this is a great token, that though he had ben in the greateſt dignitie and offices in the commune weale, ye died he ſo poore, that he left not to bury him twoſhipfully. into the north to the furthest part of Scot-lande, called Calidonia, which Plinius, Solinus, and Partianus, doe agree to be 800. miles. The breadth of it (after Partianus) is. 300. Italian myles. The narrowest distaunce betwene this yle and Caleps landes (called of Plinie Gessorac-um in Gallia) is. 50. Italian miles. It is nowe gested to be. 30. englyshe myles. Of the firste naming of this yle is yet no certain determinatio, for asmuch as there remayneth no auncient historie, making thereof remembrance, the olde Bytons booke (suche as weare) beyng all destroyed by the Sarons: who indououred them selve to extinct utterly the honorable renouue in the name of Bytons, lyke as the Goths delte with the Romains. Also the part of Titus Linius, where the conquest of Bytayne is remem-bred, with the histories of Julius Rusticus, and others noble wyriters, that wrote specially of this countrey, are utterly perished. Suche as remain, as the commentaries of Julius Cesar, Cornelius Tacitus, Dionysius Siculus, and thei that wrote of Cosmographie, haue omitted the originall beginning of the name. The history of Cyldas the Byton can not be founde, who was after the Sarons had invaded this royaume: and therefore mought lacke suche booke, as shoulde best instructe hym. As for Weda semeth to haue sen nothing written of that matter. For where he sayeth, that this yle toke the name Britannia, of the inhabitants of Britayne in Fraunce, it is nothing lyke to be true. For that countrey was (not long before the tyme of Weda) named Armorica or Armoricus tractus, whan this yle was called of moste auncient wyriters Britannia, and (as Solinus wyrteth) seemed to bee an other world, for as muche as the west part of Gallia was thought to be the uttermoste parte of this world. Also Julius Cesar wyrteth, that the places of this yle were unknowne to frechmen saueing to a fewe marchauntes: and yet they knewe no farther, then the sea coaste toward Fraunce. Moreover the same Bytons affirme, that it was left among them in remembrance, that the innermoste parte of the countrey, was inhabited of them, which had their fyrst beginning in the same ple. This well considered, with the augetie of the wypter, both an excellent prince, and also a great learned man, and was himselfe in this ple, it is not to be doubted, but that he most diligently searched for the true knowledge of the auncient & thereof. And if he mought haue founden, that the inhabitants had come of the stocke of Cneas, of whose progenie he him selfe came, he would haue reioysed much, for the prowesse and valiaunt courage, which he commended in them. Moreover, that the name came of Brutus (whom our wypters imagined to descende of Cneas the Tropane) is no more likely, than that this ple was called Albion of Noctekians daughter, or of whyte rockes. Al the olde Latine hystorians agree, that the sonne of Syluius, the seconde in succession from Cneas, & of them named the sonne of Ascanius, was Cneas, called also Syluius. Whereunto the Grekes do also accorde: but they name Syluius to be brother to Ascanius, & bozne after the death of Cneas, and was therfore called Posthumus. But neyther the Romaines nor the Grekes doe write of any man called Brutus, before Julius Brutus, which expelled Tarquinus out of Rome. Whiche name was also geue to him (by the sonnes of Tarquine) in derision, because they toke him to be folke and dull witted. Moreover, there is so much diuersitie betwene Britannia and Brutus, that it seemeth against reason, that the one should procede of the other. For if Brutus had bene the gener of the first name to this ple, he woulde haue called it Brutia, or Brutica, rather then Britannia, whiche hath no maner proportion or analogie with Brutus. But now wil I (as I haue done in the word Albion) declare a reasonable cause of conjecture, why this ple was named Britannia. About 30. yerres sence, it hapned in Wiltshire, at Juy church aboute two myles from Sarisburie, as men digged to make a foundation, they founde an holow stone couered with an other stone, wherin they founde a booke, hauinge in it litle above .xx. leaues (as they saide) of very thicke volume, wher-in was some thinge written. But when it was shewed to priestes and chanoins, whiche were there, they could not reade it. Wherefore after they had tossed it from one to an other (by the meanes wherof it was tozne) they did neglecte and cast it aside. Long after a pece therof hapned to come to my handes: whiche not withstandinge it was all to rente and defaced, I shewed to maister Richard Pace, than chiefe secretary to the kynges moste royal maiestie, wherof he exceedingly reioysed. But because it was partely rent, partely defaced and blourred with inke whiche had fallen on it, he could not finde any one sentence perfecte. Notwithstandinge after longe beholdinge, he shewed me, it seemed that the said booke contained some auncient monument of this ple, and that he perceiued this worde Prytania, to be put for Brytannia. But at that tyme he sayde no more to me. Afterwarde, I geuyng much study and diligence to the reauyng of hyposozies, consyderinge wherof this worde Britannia first came, syndyng that all the ples in this parte of the Ocean, were called Britannie, after my first conjecture of Albion, remembryng the sayde wyptinge, and by chaunce syndyng in Suidas, that Prytania in greke, with a circumflected aspiratiō, doeth signifie metalles, sayres and markettes, also reuenues belonging to the commune treasure: I than conceyued this opinion, that the Grekes flourisyinge in wisdom, prowesse, and experience of saylyng, beinge entred into the Ocean sea, founde in the ples great plenty of tyn, leade, yron, brasse, and in diuers places golde and syluer in great quantitie, they called all those ples by this generall name Prytania, signifying the place, by y whiche came out of it, as one would say, he wet to market, when he goeth to Antwerpe, or Barrow: or to the sayre, when he goeth to Sturbridge: or to his reuenues, when he goeth to any place, from whence his reuenues dooe come. And yet, because this ple excelled all the other in euery condition, it was of some priuately called Albion, that is to say, more happy or rycher. This conjecture appocheeth more nigh the true similitude, then the other inuentions, except there be any auncient hystory before the tyme of Geoffrey of Monmouth or Beda, which may more probably confute that I haue declared. So suche wyl I gladly geue place. Finally I thought it alwaies more honourable, to haue receyued the first name by suche occasion as I haue reherced, and the generation of the inhabitants of this lande, to be eyther equall with the moste auncient, or myred with the most wyse and valiaunt people of Grece, vanquishers and subduers of Trojanes, than to take the name and first generation of a dayne fable, or of a man, if any such were, which after he had slayne his father, wandred about the worlde, vncertaine where to dwell, Also to aduaunt vs to come of the Trojanes, causers of their owne countreys destruction, by fauourpge the aduouty of Paris and Helena, of whom neuer proceeded any other notable monument, but that they were also brauers of thep othe and promise. Yet this folp is founde almoste in all people, which contend to haue their progenitours come fyrst from Troy. Whiche fantasie may wel be laughed at, amonge wyse men. The sayth of Christe was fyrst receiued in this royaume, after the incarnation. 156. yerres.

Of this name most notable was Julius Cesar, Consull and companion in office with Cribulus, in the. 695. yere after Rome was builded. In ninetene peres space this man conquered and subdued to the Romayne empyre all the countrey of Fraunce, bounded within the mountaynes Pyrenei, and the Alpes, with the ryuers Rhodanus and Rhyne. Firste of all the Romanes, he makinge a bypde ouer Rhyne, assauted the Germanes, and put them to muche scathe. He entred this countrey of Byttayne also, and made a parte of it tributary. In the ende, when he could not obteyne of the Senate, in consyderation of his valiaunt actes, to be chosen Consull in his absence, he tourned his power against his countrey, by force intendinge to wyne that, which by saye meanes he could not obtayne: therefore he commynge vpon a suddayne without resistance, gotte into his handes Lombardie, Pice, Umbria, and Tuslane, and caused Pompey to fle out of Italie into Grece. Then, he strykinge backe into Spayne, overcame there the greate armie that Pompey had lesse in the gudyng of thre capitaines, Petreus, Afranius, and Varro. This thyng beyng atchued with such prosperous success, he wente into Grece against Pompey, whom in a great battaile in the fieldes of Pharsalia he overthrew. Afterwarde he vanquished king Ptolomie in Aegypt, Scipio and Iuba in Afrike, and Pompeies sonne in Spayne, and for his victories triumphed. v. tymes. Of this man and Pompey it was saide, that they weare of so haute courages, that the one could not abyde an equall, the other a superiour: whiche their immoderate affections and desyre of superiortie, brake out in the ende, to a most dreadfull ciuile warre, wherewith al the world almost was vexed and troubled, not onely with the losse of many thousande souldiours, but also of a greatte number of worthy & noble men of great fame and renowme.

They all aunswere, yea, he is and shall be. Than saith the carle, By what ryght may he putte me from this place? Than aunswereth the Carle of Coistia: Thou shalt haue for thy place .i. grotes, these two bestes (the cow and the mare): the princes appaile, which he did late put of. Also thi family or kinne shalbe free from all maner of tribute. Than the carle, geuynge the prince a litle blowe on his cheeke, byddeth hym be a good iudge, and comynge dothane from the stone geueth him place.

and so departeth, taking with him the cow and the mare. Then the prince goeth by on a stone, and holding a naked swerde in his hande, branding it, turneth to every parte of the stone, promysing equall iudgement to all the people. When is there brought to hym colde water in an housebandmans cappe, whiche he dzyrketh, signifying that he condemneth dzyrking of wyne. Then goeth he to a churche thereby: where, after he hath hearde diuine seruice, he putteth of his rusticall rayment, and putteth on appaile of honour. And dymyng with his nobilitie sumptuously, he cometh eftsoones to the meadowe, where he heareth matters, and minystrerth iustice. Catizi, The people called Pygmei.

Cato, onis, Was not fyrste a surname, but a name of merite. For the auncient Romaynes called him Cato, that was wyse by muche experience. Of this name, two were moke excellent: Marcus Cato Censorius, because he alwayes vied the grauitie and rygour that was wont to be in the correctours of maners, called Censores. Also he hymselfe beyng Censor, was aboue all other moke sharpe and rigorous. Valerius Max. wyrteth, that he was almost an olde man er he learned learned latine letters, and thā it seemeth he was olde er he learned grēke. Yet notwithstanding by gathering abridgements out of Thucydides and Demosthenes workes, he became the greatest oratour of his time, and was called the Romaneyne Demosthenes. He beyng made Consul, Iuanne more cities in Spayne, than he had aboden dayes in that countrey. In whiche iourney he reteyned to himselfe, nothing of all that was founde there, but meate and drynke onely. He made his souldiours ryche, geuinge to euery of them a pounce weight of syluer, sayng: Better it were, that many Romaneyns retourned to Rome with syluer, than a fewe with golde. He taught his owne sonne grammar, not withstanding he had a seruauit called Chylo, an excellent grammarian, and taught a great scholl, sayng: It is not convenient, if my sonne be flow of learning, he should be rebuked or pulled by the eares of hym, that is of a seruile condicion. He also taught him the ciuile lawes, the exercise of all weapons, to ryde well, to fight with the fistes, to susteine bothe colde and heate, to leape into waters, and swymme against swift streames. Being Consul, he spared none estate, whose manners he founde corrupted, or superfluous in lyving, wherby he brought into the citie a merueylous ymage of vertue. His sentences reherbed by Plutarke be wounderfull: of whiche I will remember three. Like as the diers, saied he, dooe die most often that colour, whiche they doe perceiue most men delite in: so young men do most studiousely haunte and embrace that, which thei se olde men and counsailours haue in molte estimation. He blamed the people of Rome, for that they committed authoritie and offices ofte tymes to one persone, sayng: They seemed not to esteeme rule and authoritie, or els they supposed there were but fewe worthy of promotion. The one was a signe of contempt, the other discouragement to god wittes, and rebuke to their countrey. When the ambassadours were chosen to be sent into Bithynia, of whō one had y goute, an other peppe in his head, and the thirde tymorous, Cato laughng said in the senat: The people of Rome sendeth an ambassade, whiche hath neither fete, head, nor herte. The life of this & of the other Cato, are worthy to be often tymes read, specially of counsailours & men in authoritie. He was before the incarnation, 182. yeres.

Cato Vtiuersis (so called because he slewe himselfe in the towne Utica, to whom the other Cato Censorius was great graundfather) shewed a wonderfull constance and grauitie, even in his childhood. Welcome mery or faine to laugh, and if he did, it was a very litle smyling: nat lyghtly angry, but if he were, he was not fone appeied. He was very studious in all mozal philosophy, practising in his aces and liuing, that which he rabde of vertue and honestie: and studied eloquence only to the intent, that in counsailing & reasoning, he mought adde vnto philosophy more force and ornament, & yet would he not practise it openly. When one saied to him, men dispraise thine obstinate silence, he answered: I force not, to thei dispraise not my liuing: but I will breake out of this silēce, whā I can speake that is worthy to be spoken. Being Tribunus militum, he was sent into Macedonie, where with his meruaylouse grauitie, prudence, & painefulnesse, he made al that were vnder him fierce and hardy against their ennemies, gentyll to their felowes, fearfull to doe iniurie, prompt to get prayes, and hymselfe labouring with them, vsing his apparayle, sedying and goying lyke vnto them: he contrary to menues expectations (not withstanding his feueritie) wan the hertes of them, going on fote and talkyng with euery man. He was of such constancie, & so farre from ambition & flatterie, that neither Pompey nor Cesar, in thei chiefe pryde, whā all men, either for deade or fauour, inclined to their desires, coulde perswade him to agre to thei mindes, in cases where it seemed to be against the weale publike: nor he mought any maner menacing or dreadful tokes moue him from that constancie. In so much, that whā he hearde that Cesar had banquished Pompey, & that his frendes would haue sent to Cesar to desire his fauour, he answered: thei which are banquished, or haue any wyse trespassed, ought to make suite, but he in al his life was neuer banquished, & in innocencie surmounted Cesar, who in making warre against his own countrey, had condemned himselfe to haue doone that thinge, which he had often denied. Finally not for malice of Cesar, but because he would not beholde y weale publike destroyed, he slew himselfe at Utica, hauinge with him at supper, the euening before, the greatest officers of that citie, & many of his frendes. Also this sentence being spoken amongst other: onely a god man is a free man, all ill men are bonde: whā one happened to reason against it, Cato being therewith chaufed, disputed with the other so vehemently and longe, that al men suspected y he would not long lyue. He died before the incarnation. 44. yeres.

Wherefore it is reported that the situation is very vnholysome, and the aire contagious. When Stratonicus a pleasant musician and merry conceited man behelde the inhabitants thereof so wane and ill coloured, he scoffed at the with this sentence of Homere, Tale quidem genus est homini, quale est foliorum. The me & the leaues of the countrey looke very like: that is, bothe wanne & pale without lyuely colour. For whiche scoffe when the people weare much greued & bitterly rayled at hym: why (saith he) may I not iustly call this a sickely and quiesse citie where dead men walke: with whiche aunswere he farre moze sharply nipped their deadly colours and wearthe lookes than he had done before.

Wherefore at his commiunge he beganne to tye hir, and with great giftes and lyberall promises, assauted hir chastite. Procris beyng ouercome with ryche rewarde condescended vnto his requeste. When Cephalus takynge agayne his owne shap and figure, greatly blamed hir lyghtnesse and unfaithfulnesse. Wherewith she beyng muche ashamed and not able to cleare hir selfe, forsooke hir husbände and lyued solitarie in the wooddes. At the length she being reconciled to hir husbände, gaue to hym the dogge Lelapa, and a darte that shoulde neuer misse thyng that it was hurled at. Cephalus hauiing those so fitte instrumentes, beganne to haunte the wooddes, and gaue hymselfe muche to huntynge more then he was wonte: In so muche that very early in the mornynge he would leaue his wyues company and goe into the wooddes. This vnsooned exercise Procris muche beganne to suspecte, and thought hir husbände to be in loue with some Pymphe, whose company to attayne, he pretended that great delyghte of hunting. Wherefore to tye this matter she solowte hym into the wooddes. And Cephalus as fortune was, for heate and labour, lay vnder a tre to refreshe hymselfe. She therefore thinking to espye hym in his embraasinges, moued hymselfe behynde a bushe where she was: Whom Cephalus fearinge to bee some wyld beaste, cast his vneitable darte and killed his dearely beloued wyfe. And where in speaking or writing appeared to be a merynplous delectatiō or sweetnesse, it was saide, that therin was a grace, in Greeke Charis. Some me suppose that there were thre Graces deuised to signifie that men ought to be both beautiful and gracious to other, and sedcōly to take benefites at other mēs handes, and thirōly thākefully to requite benefites receiued: whiche are thre fundre actes in the vse of liberalitie. Other say they imagined thre graces to signifie liberal thankfulness, and that we shoulde plentifully requite benefite with vantage moe then we receiued. Wherefore they painte the Graces in this maner, that the ones backe should be towarde vs, and hir face frontward, as proceeding from vs, the other two towarde vs: noting double thanke to bee due for the benefite we haue done. They weare also painted naked, to doone men to witte, that pleasures shoulde be done vnseinedly without cloke or dissimulation: they weare made yonge, to note that the memozy of a benefite shoulde in no tyme weare awaye and decaye: they weare desclined laughing, because pleasures ought to be donne with a chereful and glad minde: finally their armes weare painted, as if weare linked one within an other, to teach that kyndnesse shoulde be vndissoluble, and one benefite so to prouoke an other, as it may make the league of loue and frendship sure & perpetual.

Cicero, onis, m. g. The surname of Marcus Tullius: whose diuine eloquence, abundante learninge, sharpensse of wit, dexteritie in actes, and most ardent loue to the common weale of his countrey, can not be sufficiently expressed by a moze fall mans tounge or pen. He lineally descended from the auncient kynges of the Volscians: and be it tyme and occasion wearynge out dignities in blood, his name continued longe in the state of worship. His auncestours were called Ciceros, because Tullius Appius, a noble kynge of the Volscians, had on his nose, a marke lyke a chiche pease, called Cicero. In his childehode, he so excelled all other chyldren in wytte, that their fathers meued with his fame, went purposely to the schoule to beholde and here him. He so profited in the eloquence of greke and latine, that not onely his companions were in a meruailous admiration of him, but also Apollonius (the most excellent oratour at that time) hearing him, & not speaking a great space, saied at last: Truly Cicero, I praise thee, and meruayle at thee: but I lament the fortune of the Grækes, whan I consider, that by thee, learninge and eloquence, which were left vnto vs onely, are euen now translated vnto the Romanes: which sayng was afterwarde founde true. For whiche what subtiltie was in Logike, what commoditie in mozall philosophie, what secrete knowledge in philosophie natural, he knew it (as Macrobius writeth) and declared it in latine most eloquently. And he beyng but a very yonge man, came to practise in Rome, studied abundantly the ciuile lawes, was meruailously occupied in great weighty causes. And after he was Senator, was continually (as it seemed) most busy about the weale publyke. Yet he that exauly readeth his workes, shall thinke he neuer ord any thyng but reade great authours, and wryte booke. For there was no philosopher, no oratour, no poete before his tyme that escaped him, as doeth in his booke sufficiently appere. And yet how many booke made he? sence we haue not the thirde part of them, yet such as we haue, if any man now did wyte so much, and so well, we shoulde thinke him to haue spent the moze parte of his time in wyptynge. And noble Cicero, lorde god how many thynges did he exploite by his wisdom and diligence, in most weighty affayres, as well in warre as peace: how dyd he by his dexteritie and prudence saue the cite & people of Rome from the most pernicious confederacie and rebellion of Catiline, and other of the nobilitie, whiche went about to destroy the weale publike, and robbe the cite: how preferred he the same cite and people, after the death of Cesar, that they were not oppressed by Marcus Antonius: for his incomparable actes, the whole Senate and people gaue to him, fyrst before any, the name of father of the countrey. What trouble and misery suffeyned he, beyng exyled by the procurement of Clodius, onely for the puttynge of the saide rebelles to death: Such is the rewarde of people vnsfable. Likewise for dyspaynye Antonius out of Rome, and by his sharpe ozations, causynge him to be proclaymed enemy to the weale publike: he made Antonie so much his ennemie, that in the treaty of peace betwene him and Octavius, he demanded Cicero, to doe with him his pleasure. Which thing graunted of the vnkinde Octavius (whom Cicero had brought up, and by his meanes caused to be made chiefe gouernour of Rome) Antonie sente one Herennius (whom Cicero had saved from death by his eloquence) to pursue him as he fled. Which thinge whan Cicero perceyued, he abode his commynge. And lyng in an horse lytter for weakenesse, he did with constant eyes prepare his thyoate to Herennius: who did (all other men abhorryng) strike of his head, & handes, and brought them to Antonie: who retoyng therat, caused the head and handes to be set ouer the place of ciuile iudgements of Rome, whiche dayly beholden of the Senate and people of Rome, was lamed. He flourished about xl. yeres before the incarnation. For his life and aces reade Plutarch, de vitis. Corn. Nepos, Appian. Sabel. A poph. Erasmi.

He couenaunted with Lysias to teach him his science, vnder this condition, to haue halfe his money before hande, and the residue, when he shoulde by pleasyng ouercome and obtayne any cause in iudgement. Lysias in proceesse of tyme profyted muche in eloquence, and yet would not take by him any cause to pleade. Whiche thinge when he was thought to doo of purpose to defeat his maister of the residue of his money, Corax sued him in the lawe, and concluded the summe of his accusation in this subtile argumēt: Learne thou, foliſhe yong mā that thou arte, that which way so euer the matter now falleth out in iudgemente, thou must pay me my money: For if thou ouercome and cast me, then is my money due, by the bargaine that was betwene vs: If I ouercome, and the iudges condemne the to pay it, then is it due by law. To this answered Lysias: pay I shal not so (saith he) but vnderstande you (beyng so wyse a man as you are) that you can haue the money of me by neyther meanes. For if you o-uercome in iudgement, then by the agremente betwene vs, can you requyre no money: for our bargaine was, you shoulde haue it when I shoulde ouercome in iudgemente: but if I cast you, how can you lawfully aske money at my handes, beyng quyt and discharged by the sentence of the iudges. Whiche when the iudges heard, beyng in admiration of the yong mans wit, said: κακὸν νογᾶνδς κακὸν δοῦν, that is Mali corui malum oum: A curle crowe hath hatched a thye wide egge: a crafty maister hath byed as crafty a scholer: alluding in the Greke prouerbe to the name of Corax. One, named Lucius Crausus (next to Tully) was the moste excellent orator amonge the Romanes: of whom, and Quintus Scaenola, Tully writeth in this wise: Thinke not (I say) Brutus, that in this cite were ever two more excellent persons. For where it is wel known, that of all counsaillours, the one (Scaenola) was most eloquent: the other (Crausus) was in counsailling moste excellent. Likewise in all other thinges they were unlyke one to an other: but so as ye coulde not tell, unto whiche of them ye woulde wishe to be lyke. For Crausus of all delicate and soly, was the moste soly: Scaenola of all that were soly, was moste freshe & pleasant. Crausus with gentlenesse had sufficient seueritee, in the great seueritee of Scaenola lacked no gentlenesse.

Crausus, called Marcus, was the richest pryuate person of the Romanes: he had in his treasure. 7100. talentes, whiche amounteth of our money to. 1100350. li. or more truly after the computation and valuation of Wonsfall, to. 82000. li. sterlynges, besides that he had geuen the. r. parte of his mouables to Hercules in offringe, and had made a feast to all the people of Rome, appointing to every man the rate of thre Marnas. He woulde say, he ought not to be called a riche man, except he coulde with his yerely rente mainteine a legion, which commonly cōteyned 6000. footemen, and. 500. men of armes. By whiche wordes it may be well supposed, that where Plinie esteemeth the riches of Crausus to be. 20000. sestertia, which in the rate of our money is. 31065. li. the same summe was the yerely revenues of Marcus Crausus, every sestertius, beyng. vi. li. xi. s. ix. d. ob. whiche revenues were not onely of his possessions, graine, fruite, and cattall, but also of the labours of bondmen, whiche he dyd lette to hyre, they beyng instructed in al maner sciences and artes: of whom were. 500. carpenters, of all the other a muche greater numbre. All that they gayed, came to his coffers. For euer he practised usury, lending lightly to all men that wold borrow, but if they brake promise with him, he was in exactyng thereof extreme and rigorous.

He gatte infinite substaunce by men atteynted in the tyme of Sulla. He was exceedingly courteous and vnsfable, but vsynge much liberalitee and affabilitie towarde the people: he was alway in greates estimation amonge them: he was eloquent, and woulde pleade in every common cause. Finally, beyng steered with countenellie and enuy, at the greates honours that Cesar and Pompei had obteyned, he procured warre against the Parthians, by whom both he and his sonne with. 30000. Romanes were slayne, many also were taken, whiche as Plutarche writeth, hapned by his negligence, beyng more indolent aboute the gathering of money, then in governing his army. Suidas and Laertius write that he made money of all the substance that he had, and put it in the handes of a banker, willinge him, if his chyldren proued to be philosophers, to geue the money to his poore countreyne: sayynge, that philosophers hauing witte and learninge dyd neede no riches: but if they proued vnlearned, then to deliuer the the stocke of money that he left behinde him, for their reliefe.

Creon, The sonne of Menæstus, & father to Jocasta, who, after that Oedipus had unwittingly killed his father, dyd take vpon him the kyngedome of Thebes. But for so muche as the monster Sphinx dyd with great crueltie spoyle all the countrey about, noz any other remedy could be found of that great misery, but that one must disolue the doubtfull riddle that Sphinx proposed. This Creon caused proclamation to be made ouer all Græce, that who so euer coulde doe it, shoulde haue the olde quene Jocasta to his wiue, and that he woulde willingly also yelde up the kyngdome of Thebes unto him. This large offer caused many to attempte the tryng, but whē they could not rightly do it, they were cruelly slayne by the monster. At the last Oedipus the unknownen sonne of Jocasta, moued with the same hereof, commeth from Cozynthē thy-ther, and by his wisdom dissolved the riddle.

Whiche thinge Spīr took so greivously, that he cast himselfe downe an hyll, and brake his neck. By this meanes Oedipus got the kingdome of Thebes, and unwittingly maried his owne mother Iocasta, whereas he had not long before also ignozantly kyled his father Laius.
Which thinges when he dyd afterwarde under-stande, he conceived so great sorow that he pulled out his owne eyes, and would also ostentimes haue slayne himselfe, had not his daughter Antigone kept him. Wherefore he willingly wente in banishment to Athens, leaupnge his kyngedome to Creocles and Polynices his two sonnes, to occupy the same by course. But when Creocles beyng the elder, after the first yere would not admitte his brother Polynices to reigne, vpon that occasion great and cruell warre was rayled betwene the Thebanes and the Argiues. In whiche, when it happened both the brothers, meetinge in the battayle, to be slayne eache of other, Creon took on him the kyngedome agayne. Finally for his outragious crueltie, as well in other thynges, as in murderynge Antigone and Argia, Theseus of Athens, who had honeste and good sonnes: & they also had likewise good chyldren: all which he saw in his lyfe: and when he had lpyed a god tyme honestly, at the last, fightyng against and vanquishyng the ennemys of his countrey, he dyed a fayre deathe, and was in the same place honourably buried of the Atheniens. Whan Crœsus asked, who was most happie next Tel-lus, he saied, Cleobis and Bitō, which were Ar-giues, and had a competent lyuynge, and in all games, in prouynge of strength, they obtayned the pryce. Crœsus, being abashed, said vnto So-lon: My friend of Athens, settest thou so little by our felicitie, that thou preferrest before vs these private persons? Solon answered: Truly Crœsus,

Croesus, in proceſſe of tyme, many thinges are ſene, which men would not ſee: and many thinges be ſuffered, that men would not ſuffre. And ſpeaking much of mans calamitie, at the laſt he concluded, ſaying: The ende of every thyng is to be looked on, whereto it ſhall come. for god plucketh vp by y^e rootes many men, unto whom he gaue all fortune at pleaſure. Croesus made hereto no conſequence, but eſteeming Solon for a ſoule, conſidering he paſſed ſo light vpon thinges which appeared good, let him departe. A good ſpace after, Croesus by the comforte of Apolloes anſwere at Delphos, attempting warre againſt Cyrus kynge of Perſia, was at the laſt taken of him: who cauſed a great pyle of wood to be made ready, and Croesus gyued to be ſette on the toppe thereof: Than forthwith Croesus remembryng the wordes of Solon, that no man lyuynge was bleſſed, or on all partes happy, lamentynge, cryed: O Solon, Solon, Solon, whiche Cyrus hearynge, cauſed to be demaunded of him, who it was that he named. Croesus with muche difficultie tolde what he was, and declared all that befoze is rehearſed. Which whā Cyrus had hearde, recogniſynge himſelfe to be alſo a man, ſoze repented, that he went about to burne him, which was equall to him ſelfe in honour and reſpecte: and commaunded him to be taken from the fyre, whiche than began to flame: and ſo with great difficultie he was deliuered. Afterwarde Cyrus enterteined him honourably, and vſed his counſaile, which in many thinges be founde very proſpytable.

For he was temperate, wyse, of great grauitie, vying tyme mysely, of courage inuincible, so diligent in obseruynge trouthe, that he woulde at no tyme lye, neyther in earnest nor in game. He was continent, mercifull, wonderfull patient, suffering inuenges both of the people, and of his friends. He was secrete and trusty, so farthfull and lowage to his friends, that whan any of theim were take in warres, or any of their daughters ready to be married, and they not able to sette them forth, accordyng to their degrees, he would assenble the residue of his friends, and exhorte them to geue vnto hym that lacked, accordyng to their poyners. He himselfe woulde liberally geue to the quantitie of his substaunce, whiche was but little, although he were in great auhoritie (for he refused all rewardes, sayunge thanks onely) & whan he hadde made a good summe of that, whiche was graunted, before he receyued it, he broughte hym that shoulde haue it, vnto the geuers, that he moughte receiue it of theim, and knowe how much he was bounde vnto euerie of theim. He ostentynes refused great summes of money and ryche presentes sente to him by princes, although he were poore) sayng: If the thing were honest whiche he was required to doe, he woulde doe it because it was good, without any rewarde: If it were yll, or not honest, all the gooddes of the worlde shoulde not make hym doe it: If it were profitable to his countrey, he was bounden and ready to doe it freely: If it were otherwyse, all the rycheffe in the worlde moughte not counteruayle the loue that he bare to his commune weale. In eloquence no Theban might be compared vnto hym, and his sentences were grave, and veray compendious, wherby in countayles he vanquished and put to rebuke greates and famous oratours. In battayle he ouerquene the Atheniens and the Lacedemonians, and in one day had the victorie of all Grece. At the last, in the battayle at Mantinea, betwene the Thebans and the Lacedemonians, he was stricken & wounded to death with a longe speare, the head remainyng styll in his bodie: yet receyued he life, vntill it was tolde hym that his holte had the victorie. Than sayde he, I haue lyued longe enough, for I dye vnbauquished. The vron being drawen out of his bodie, he died, before the incarnation of Christ. 372. yere. This one thing is well to be considered (as Probus sayeth) the citie of Thebes, before Epaminondas was boine, and also after he was dead, was vnder the rule and subiection of other people. But durynge the tyme that he was a gouernour in the weale publyque, the citie was head and gouernour of all Grece: wherby it may be well perceived, that one suche noble man is more than a whole citie.

Heraclitus, The name of a philosopher of Pontus, a sophister of Lycia, a grammarian of Sicilie, and of a famous painter of Macedonia.

Heraclitus, A philosopher, whiche alwayes swepte when he behelde the people, considering howe busy they were to gather treasure, and how negligent in the well bypynging vp of their chyldre: His workes of a purpose were obscure and hard to be vnderstande. When he was olde, he fel into a droopie, in whiche neglecting physicians he was apped him, he in cove bunge, and so lyyng a sleape in the sunne, was tozned and deuoured of dogges. He had no maister, but by his owne nature and diligence preuayled to great knowledge: He luyed in tyme of the last Macedon, and wrote many thynges of philosophie in verses. Aristotle doth often vse his testimonye. An other of that name was an excellent remmer.

Herculanum, A towne of Campayne.

Herculanus, o; Hercules, a, um, Of Hercules.

Herculanus nodus, A certayne knotte harde to be broken, whereby a subtil question or syllogismus may be signified. Festus Pompeius wyrteth, that in olde time the custome was, that whan the new maried byrde went to bedde, the shoulde be gyfte with a woulleu gyrdel, knitt with Hercules knot, whiche the housbande for good lucke shoulde vndoe in the bedde, that he myght be fortunate in getting of childzen. For Hercules is reported to haue .72. sonnes, and one daughter, as Aristotle wyrteth De natura animalium, lib. 7. cap. 6.

Herculana pars, & Herculeus questus, Hercules his part: It was the custome of men in olde time, to auaile the tenth parte of their goodes vnto Hercules, and that tenth part was called Herculana pars.

Hercules, Lyke Hercules.

Herculeus, A Romayne, whiche fauoured the parte of Marius.

Hercules, Someth to be a generall name geuen to men excellen in strength all other of their tyme. Cicero De natura deorum wyrteth, that amongst auncient writers were sounde six Hercules. Varro affirmeth, there were thre and forty. Finally there is no notable mention made but of two, the one called Hercules Aegyptius or Libycus, whiche is supposed to be Olympe, of whom is wyrtten hereafter. The other (longe after hym) was sonne of Jupiter and Alcmena, called Alcides by his propre name. And for his incomparable strength and labours (taken for the common profitte of mankynde) he was named also Hercules. All be it Herodotus affirmeth Hercules to be the sonne of Olympe, and kynge of Egypte, and was called Hercules Libycus, because he conquered Libya. Saina Hierome on the tenth chapitre of Genesis wyrteth, that this Hercules perfourmed the twelue notable labours, whiche poetes wyrt of, and not Alcides, sonne of Alcmena. The first labour (as Dioscorus wyrteth) was the sleaying of a Lyon in the moode of Jemea, that farre exceeded all other Lyons in greatnesse, whiche mough not be slayn with metall, nor stone: wherfore he was constrained to slea hym with his handes. The second labour was the kyllynge of Hydra the monster, in the fennes of Lerna, whiche had an hundred neckes with serpentine heades, and whan one was cutten off, there did aryse effones. ii. other heades. The thirde labour was the taking of the great wyld boze of Cerymantus, whiche wasted the countrey of Arcadia, and all people dyad hym. But finally Hercules take hym alpye, and bearing him on his shoulders, brought him vnto kynge Euristheus. The fourth labour was the battaile whiche he had alone with the great nombre of men called Centaurs, that were of great strength and swifte as hoxes: all theim he slew, whan they assaulted him. The fifth was the taking of the great harte in reining, whiche for his swiftenesse had his hoxes gylted. The sixt was the destruction of the byrdes Stymphalides, whiche consumed the frutes and grayne of the countreys adioynynge. The seventh was the makinge cleane of the ore hall of Augea kynge of Elis, whiche would receiue .3000. oxen at once; and had not beene clesed or ridde in .30. yeres: so that it myght seme vnpowable to haue it clesed: the whiche not withstanding Hercules perfourmed by wysdome, conueighynge into it the ryuer Alpheus: whiche by the swyft course of the streame, in one daye caried awaye the dounge, without any reproche vnto Hercules. The eight was the bypnyng of a Bull from Creta into Grece, daryng hym along the sea. The nynthe was the taking of Diomedes kynge of Thracia, and carrying hym to his hoxes, who feeding them with mans fleshe, was himselfe of them deuoured. And after Hercules breakynge those wyld hoxes, and making them gentill, brought them to Euristheus. The x. labour was his voyage into Spayne, and sleaing of Cerion and his sonnes, and taking the great kyne, whiche he gaue to a kynge in that countrey, who continually afterwards, did yerele offer in sacrifice, to the honour of Hercules, one of the bulles, that came of those kyne. The eleuenth was his goynge into hell, & fetchynge thence Theseus and Pirithous, and bypnyng with him in a chayne Cerberus, the dogge of hell, hauynge thre heades. The twelfth and last labour was the taking of the golde apples, out of the gardeynes Hesperides, and sleaing the terrible dragon, whiche continually watchynge kepte those apples, whiche were called golden for the beauty of theim. Some saye they weare shepe, whose sices were of the colour of golde, and the dragon signifieth the diligence and strength of the shepheard, whiche kepte theim. These were the twelue labours of Hercules, whereof greweth this prouerbe.

Herculei labores*, where the labours doose seme impossible to be atchieued.

Herculis cothurnos*, was vsed for a pauerbe, wherein a thyng of lytle importance was set forth with great eloquence. or other thyng so lemne, more apte for a greater matter, as one shoulde put Hercules hosen on a chyldes legges. Wherewith accorded the sayynge of the wise king Agelaus, whan one commended to hym a rhetorician, whiche by his crafty eloquence made trifles & small thynges to seme great, The king answered: That sooner deserueth no praise, which putteth a great shoe on a very litle fote: meaning thereby, that the wordes shoulde as well accorde with the matter, as the garment with the person. This is so common a vice now a dayes among students of eloquence, that in wytyng and speakyng, they seme to prepare the hofe before they knowe the measure of the legge, wheron they wyll put it.

Hercules Gallus, As Lucianus wyrteth, was in the olde tyme in Fraunce an ymage made lyke an olde man, with a balde head, and vnkempt, his heare very whyte, the skynne of his face rypcl- led, and as if tvere burned with the sunne, wea- ryng on hym a Lyons skynne, and bearyng in his righthande a great clubbe, in his lefte hande a bowe, a quiver at his backe, drawyng after hym a multitude of people, tyed by their cares with a little chayne wyrought with ambrze and golde, but they weare so easly tied, that lau- ghyn and with good chere they willingly fol- lowed, and as it semed, woulde not be loused: and the other end of the chayne was tied at Her- cules tongue, who looked towarde theim with a laughing countenance. This ymage signified eloquence, whiche for the puissance thereof, re- sembled rather Hercules than Mercurie. And his age betokened, that for the mooste parte eloquence is substantiall and vehement. That Hercules, or rather eloquence draweth men by the cares tied to his tounge, signifieth the affinitie betwene the tounge and the care: and their glad and vo- luntary folowyn, signifieth with what delecta- tion eloquence draweth men unto hir persuasi- ons and exhortations.

shoes, patens, and coate wrought of the fynest threde, with thre threde stiches, a baudrike of baudken, with changeable colours and sundry pictures, a mantell of whyte ouer all, a rpyng on his fpynger with a stone, wherin was a signet mosse perfectly wrought. All this did he wozke with his owne handes. Also he caried with him a little oyle bottell, with a narrowe mouth, and the residue rounde and flat, with a little instrumente to stryke sweate from his body hangyng therat. He played excellently on euery instrument, and fange his owne verses in all kyndes, whiche no man coulde amende. In all partes of logike, rhetorike, and philosophie, he banquished many, and was banquished of none. He ranne, wozked, & did other feates of actiuite, that all men beholding hym were therewith abashed. Finally, he seemed not to be ignorant, weake or vnable in any thyng. Not withstanding Plato in two dialogues byngeth in Socrates disputing with him. In the one in searching what beaute is, in the other what a lie is, he concludeth and proueth Hippias to be arrogant and ignorant soke, for as muche as praysing beaute, he wyte not what beaute was, and boastyng that he befoze any other ma could discerne a lyer from a true man, he coulde not make of them a definition. By this it appeareth howe muche the common iudgement of men barieth, and is inferiour to the iudgement of a perfecte wyse man, as Socrates was.

And because his father dyd not foorthwith beleue it, he was spechelesse vntyll the eight daie after the byrth of the child, and that he had wyrtten in tables, his name is John: than was his mouth opened, and he spake glorifying God, and made the name of the new testamēt dominus deus Israel. This John was of suche perfection and holynesse, that our Saviour Christe testified of hym, that he went in the spirite and trouth of Ysaas the prophete: but yet but yet was he more then a prophete, & the messenger promised by the prophete Malachias, that god would sende, which should prepare the way before him. Semblably John testified of Christe, that he was the sonne of God. John lyued in wyldeynes, his garmente was of Camelles heares, hit gyrdell of a skynne about his loynes, his meate Locusts, and honny of the wodes. He baptysed onely by water, teaching repentance and the approachinge of the kyngdome of heauen. But because he sayde to Herode, it was not lefull for him to haue his brothers wyfe, he was by him put in prison, and finally at the petition of the daughter of Herodiades, who dauided before him (by the perswasion of Herodiades, who was his brothers wyfe) his head was stricken of, & in a dishe brought by the mayden vnto his mother in open banquet. Josephus antiquitatum. lib. 18. calleth him a very good man, who commended the Jewes to labour to gette vertue, to keepe true religion towardes god, and by baptisme to ioyne together in one. Also he saith that many men thought, that in the battaile betwene Herode and Aretha, by the iust vengeance of god, for puttynge John Baptiste to death, the hoste of Herode was utterly destroyed. He was bozne somewhat before the natiuite of Christ, and was put to death before Christ suffered his passion, one yere.

Of the whiche descrypte of his mother, he complained to his father in prison, desyringe him to perswade constantlye in his good purpose. After the death of his father, he gaue himselfe continuallye to the studie of holy scripture, whiche he had tasked befoze by his fathers instruction. And yet, befoze he was .xx. yeres olde, he excelled all men of his tyme, as well in philosophy, as all other sciences. At the age of .xlii. yeres he expounded gentile authours openly, wherein he so enterlaced the holy scripture, that he conuerted many greates learned men to the fayth of Christe. His lyuynge was so stryfte and vertuous, that he drew many vnto him, and was amonge all men had in a wonderfull reuerence. He neuer ceased in all persecutions to comforte and comforte men in the embracyng of martyrdome, and dydde continuallye reade openly, and also wrote innumerable booke in the expoundinge of holy scripture. He went into dyuers countreys to preache, and for his greates fame, Mammea the mother of the noble emperour Alexander Seuerus, sente for him to Rome, and hearde him, and (as some suppose) was by him conuerted. He obserued all the preceptes of the gospell moste stryftely, in continuall fastinges and watchinges, hauing but one garmente, goynge alwaies barefoote, counsaylynge all his hearers to renounce all that they had, and to geue it in almes. Also he gelded himselfe, not onely to be the more chaste, but also (because in the tyme of persecution, he taught the worde of god, as well pryvely as openly to men and women) to lette the paynyng to speake dishonestly of him, and those that repayed to his sermons and lessons: whiche although he dyd secretly, yet god woulde not haue it hyd, so that it came to the eare of Demetrius the byshop of Alexandria, who, first winderpynge at the stomache and vertue of the man, praynsinge the seruentnesse of his saythe, sayde vnto him: How like to thy doctrine and preachinge, sence thou hast leste vnto thyne aduersaries none occasion of suspition. But afterward the same Demetrius spyed with enuie, layde it in reproche against him openly, syndynge nothyng elles wherewith to dyspraise him. He that wyl knowe more of Origen, let him reade the vi. booke De historia Ecclesiastica, and saine Hierome De scripto. ecclesi. He was after the incarnation of Christe, .204. yeres.

Paulus, A name of many Romaynes : one was most excellent, named Paulus Aemilius, sonne of Lucius Paulus. He ascendyng by all dignities unto Consull, was capytayne of the warres in Spayne, wher he fought two battayles, wherin were slayne. 30000. Spaniards, and wonne 250. walled towne, & not withstanding returned to Rome, not one grote the rycher : for he was lyberal and sumptuous, and not very rich. Afterwarde he made warre against the *Liguri*ans, whiche were about Zeane, wher he haunge with hym but onely. 8000. he put to flight. 30000. and brought them to subiection. Finally, he fought against and vanquished Pertes kynge of Spacedonia, and brought hym and his chyldren prisoners to Rome, and triumphed in this fourme. The Senatours apparayled in whyte sylke, satte at stages about the market place, to beholde the tryumphe : all the temples were set op, and filled with flowers and swete perfumes : the triumphe was diuided into three dayes. The first daye bnneth suffised to the beholding of ymages, as wel painted as wrought in stone and metal, by most excellent workmen, whiche were caried in. 250. chariottes. The seconde daye was brought forth the harness and artillery of the Spacedons, and the apparayle of horses, whiche was in suche sorte, that it was in a maner terrible to the vauquishers to behold. After folowed. 3000. men, whiche bare syluer coyne in. 350. vessels of syluer, every vessell containing in weyght three talentes, whiche was. 240. li. after. 80. li. to every talent, every vessell was bozne of four men. Other dyd beare great cups and pottes of syluer. The thyrde daye the tryumpettes came before blowing bloudy cornets. After theim came. 120. oren, their hornes gylte, and thereupon were set silkettes and garlandes; and were led with yonge men, gyfte and prepared to sacrifice them: and chyldren bare cuppes of golde and syluer, to serue to the sacrifice. After them folowed they that bare money of golde in golden beuelles, every of them weyghynge thre talentes. Also the nombze of the beuelles were. 240. Than folowed they that caried the potte, whiche Aemilius had let make all of precious stones, weyghynge tenne talentes, whiche was. 800. li. Also they that bare all the plate of the kynges Antigonus, Seleucus, Thetricius, & Peres, whiche was innumerable. After came the chariot, wherin was Peres harneys, with his diademe set thereupon. Soone after his two sonnes, and one daughter led, and with theim a great numbze of nouppes, maisters, and gouernours, weeping and holding vp their handes to the people. Whereof many were moued to teares, so that the triumphe seemed to bee mingled with gladnes for the vicioie, with heauynesse for compassion. After his chyldren and seruantes folowed forthwith Peres in a blacke garmēt, trembling & troubled in spirite: whom ensued a great company of his counsaillours and officers, beholding him sorrowfully with teares, whiche more contragued the Romaynes to wepe, for pytie that they hadde of their misery. After him were borne foure hundred crownes of golde, whiche were gyuen to Aemilius by the cities of Grece for his vertue and prowesse. Thā folowed Aemilius himselfe, sitting in a chariot, veray rchely apparayled, hauing a robe of purple tinfet, and bearyng in his hande a bzaunche of laurelle, as a man beside that honour wooz shy to be looked on. Than after came the men of warre, whiche had been with hym, in order of suche bandes and companies as belonge to battayle, every of them bearyng in his hande a bzaunche of laurelle, and singyng verses myrte with mery tauntes: Some singyng the prayyses of Aemilius, whom they behelde, and wounded at for his excellent qualities. But now beholde, Aemilius being in that state and condition, that nothing lacked in him that man coulede wyshe for: yet his lyfe was not without aduersities. He hauing sower sonnes, of the whiche he had given twoo in adoption to Scipio Africanus, & Fabius Maximus: the other twoo he kepte at home with him: The one of theim died. v. daies before the triumphe, beinge sixtene yeres olde: The other beyng twelue yeres olde, dyed the thirde daye after the triumphe. The whiche cruelte of fortune all men lamented, that hadde brought so great heauynesse into the house replete with suche gladnesse, reioycing, and noble renoume, and had meddled teares, sorowes, and lamentation with vicioie, loye, and triumphe. But therefore Aemilius neuer abated his courage, but calling the people together, made to theim a noble oration, declaringe that he was nothyng deceyued by fortune, for as muche as whan he seemed to him most fauourable, he thā moze feared hir than any thyng elles: And although he had taken from hym good sonnes, whom he appointed to succede him, yet since he had shewed hir extreme malice to hym and his bloud, he had good hope nowe, that the people of Rome should remayne prosperous without any perill. A noble herte, A valiaunt courage, worthy to be left in remembrance. He brought so much gold & siluer into the tresorie of the Romaynes, that there needed no taske to be set on the people. lxxx. yeres after and aboue: yet he left in patrimonte vnneth. 592. li. and in treasure littell or nothyng. This hysioye I haue wyrtten for the notable thynges therein conteigned, with the vnfurte of prosperitie, wherin al men are blinded, that desyre to haue it. One thyng would be remembred. Although Aemilius were a fauourer of the nobilitie, yet was he better beloued of the people, than was Scipio, who onely studied to serue their purposes. For his humanitie equally mixte with grauitie, he was brought to the earth, not with sumptuous preparation, but with loue and fauour, not onely of his countrey men, but also of his ennemies. For as many of Liguria, Spayne, and Macedonia, as were than at Rome, they that were yonge and stronge dyd beare the corpes, the olde men folowed, callinge him benefactour and conseruatour of their cities and countreys.

Paulus, The apostle of Christe, borne in Judea, in a towne called Giscala, of the tribe of Benjamin, the towne beyng taken by the Romaynes, went with his parentes to Tarsus a cite of Cilicia, & dwelled there. But afterwarde he was sent by theim to Iherusalem: to learne the lawes, and was there taught of one Gamaliel, a great learned man. He being with other at the martyrdom of sainte Steuen, receiued letters of the bishop, wyllyng hym to goe to Damascus, there to persecute them that beleued in Christe. And in the waye, he was by reuelation chaunged, from a persecuter to a vessel of election. Afterwarde whan he had conuerted Sergius Paulus (than beyng Proconsull at Cypres) to the faythe of Christe, by hym he was called Paulus, where before he was named Sarnus. Finally, he suffered martyrdom by beheadyng, after the passion of Christe. xxxvi. yeres, and the xlii. yere of the reigne of Nero. Hec Hieronymus & sozomonius. The residue of his lyfe appeareth in the actes of the Apostles. His learning and misticall wysedom, is well shewed in his epistles, in the whiche (as sainte Peter sayeth) be some thynges harde to be vnderstande, and that men vnlearned and inconstant dooe depraue, lyke as they dooe the other partes of scripture, to their vniuersal perdition.

Also he beyng in great estimation and authoritie among the people of Athens, would neuer be at any feastes or banquettes, nor receiue of any mā, any presentes or giftes, nor did goe to euery assemble or council, or beyng there, did speake or reason in euery matter, but reserved himselfe to thinges of very great importance. And yet seemed he than to be very timorouse. But yet his eloquence was so excellent, his voyce and pronounciation so pleasant, his sentences so ponderous & vehement, that he neuer spake, but that therto al men consented. And therefore it is written of him, that he did fulminate his wordes, that is to saye, that they proceeded from hym as thunder, and lightninge. He was of such temperaunce, that although he seemed to haue all the Atheniens at his commaundement, yet he neuer increased his owne reuenues the worthe of one farthyng, but augmented the commune treasure exceedingly. And such spoyle as came to his part in his warres, he did employe vpon grayne and vittayle, distributing it among the people in the tyme of necessitie. He was vnfortunate onely in his owne children, his eldest sonne Xantippus persecuting him with sundry displeasures, and openly mocking hym. For withstandinge (as it was reason) he died miserably before his father. Finally Pericles being sicke vnto death, the noble men came to comfort hym, speaking softly they commended of his prowes, where he had victorie in nyne great battayles. He hearing what they spake, sayed vnto them: that he much meruailed, that they so greatly extolled that thyng, wherof the more parte perteyned to fortune, and had happened to diuers other capitaynes as well as to hym, and that they spake nothing of that which was most to be praised. For neuer man, sated he (by myne occasion) had cause to put mourning garment vpon him. Phitarchus in vitis. He was a fore the incarnation of Christ. 441. peres.

Philippus, i, A kynge of Macedonia, sonne of Amyntas, father of great Alexander: A yppnce from his chyldehode of excellent wytt and power, of whom these notable thynges be remembred. After he had vanquished the Atheniens at Cheronea, he began to reioyce of his felicitie. But to the entente that he therfore should not be the more prone to iniuries toward his subiectes, nor to haue indignation at them, whom he vanquished: he then and euer after caused a chylde to come to his chaubze doore in the morninge, and to saye aloud, Philip, thou art a man morall. Whiche he obserued so constantly, that he neuer went out of his chaubze, or receyued any countaious or iniurious word. The chylde hadde thyse spoken these wordes, not withitan-dyng that he was a Painme. Also where one named Patheas, hadde a matter in va-rtaunce before hym, Philippe takinge lyttell heede, what was spoken, and sometyme aspyng dying, at the last gaue iudgement against Parchetas: who crying out with a loude voyce, appealed. Wherby with Philip being soe moued, with a grieuouse look, saied: to whom doest thou ap-peale? appeale, (said Parchetas) unto your self, but beyng there awake, & taking heed what is spoken. Philippe being thoughtly awake, and hearing offsones the matter, perceiued that Parchetas had wronge, & would not reuer-se the iudgement, but the famine of money, wher-in Parchetas was condemned, he payde of his owne treasure. In this man it is notable howe fornicie vertues were tempered with diuers vices. He was a pyrryce more geuen to costly provision of warrefare, then fumptuousnes in ban-kettynge: and therfore his greatest riches was in the furniture and habillimentes of warre. He was more cunning to get ryches, then circum-spect to keepe them: and therfore, not withstanding his continual spoiles, he was alway ready, sperie and treacherie in like maner he esteemed.

 So way seemed to him dysconquable, inwherby he might attaine victorie. Faire language he would be, where oration ferued, and likewise pretend dyspleasure, where he hated not. In talke and conference craftie, & more would promise in wordes then in deede performe. Very skilfull bothe in pleasant iesting, and also earnest debatinge of weightie affaires. friendship he measured more by profyte, then by faithfull dealing. To pretend fauour where he hated, and to sette hatred be-twixne frindes, seeking for fauour on both sides, was his common custome. With these thynges, was iointed so excellēt language and biteresse, as neither readinesse of tongue wanted fine or-namentes of eloquence, neither slovyng speach sharpe inuentif of witte matter. In warrefare subtle & guilefull, wise in counsaile, desirous to be loved, & well able to repress his anger: somewhat to muche geuen to drynking, and vpon the deate therof diuers times in warre would heauily set vpon his enemies, and offer himselfe to more danger the needed. Wherby he was often wounded, and in perill of his life. By these properties he layde the foundation of that empire of the mo:de, whiche afterward was made perite by his famous sonne Alexander: who was both in vertues and vices more notable then ever his father was. He was also the incarnation of Chyffe. 38. verses.

Phocion, Disciple to Plato and Xenocrates, one of the chiefe gouernours of the citie of Athens, a manne of suche wonderfull grauitie and constancie, that he was not lightly seene to chaunge his countenance, either to laugh or to mourne, nor to haue his handes out of his habyte, excepte in warre: and when he was in the countrey, he went alwaye barefooted, except it were in the colde wynter, whereof there was no better token, than to see Phocion goe shodde. His speche was shorte, graue, vehemente, and full of quicke sentences: and therefore the most eloquent oratour Demosthenes called him the hatchet that did cutte of his woozdes. He was of such a constancie, that where Apollo at Delphos made aunswere, that one man in Athens was of a contrarie opynion to all the citie: whā that was reported, Phocion rose vp and saied: Leane countrey men to searche whom your god meaneth: for I am that one man, whome nothyng liketh, whiche is nowe doone in the common weale of this citie. When he had made an oration to the people, and they praylinge hym consented to hym, he turned to theim that were next him, and saied: Alas what haue I doone, I feare lest some foolyshe woorde hathe escaped me vnwares: signifyinge, that the people sel dome allowed any thyng that was good, or not foolyshe. On a tyme when he reasoned contrarie to the mynde of the people, wherefoze they murmured, and woulde haue let hym: It is at your pleasure countrey menne, saied he, to compelle me to doe that that I woulde not, but to speake otherwyse then I thynke, that no man liuyng can cause me. He was so reuerend a personage, that the great kynge Alexander, in the beginnyng of his letters, after he had banquished Darius, saluted no man but him, and Antipater. He refused infinite treasure sente vnto hym by Alexander, and although he had been the generall capitaine of the Atheniens in sundrie warres, and honourably atchued his enterpryses, yet was he beste content to lyue poozely. Finally, he was of his unkynde countrey men condemned to death, wherto he wente with the same countenance that he hadde in audozitie. When one, whiche was condemned with hym, lamented and feared to die, Phocion turnyng to hym, saied: why, arte thou not glad, that thou shalt dye with Phocion? And when one of his frendes asked hym, if he woulde any thyng to his sonne: I woulde (saied he) that suche wronge as the Atheniens doe to me, he should not remembre. Pieria coming thither with hir mother, one Phrygius, the eldest sonne of Pebeus duke of Epiletus, beholding hir beautie, began to loue hir exceedingly, and after the manner of louers, desiring to doe some thyng thankefull to the mayde, demaunded what he might doe to hir most pleasaunt and acceptable. The mayden being witty, and also louing to hir countrey and frendes, answered that to hir it should be the greatest pleasure, if he would endeavour himselfe to byng to passe, that the mought oftentimes, with a great sorte of hir companions repaire to Epiletus without any damage. Phrygius perceluting, that nothing mought so muche content the mayden as peace, he calling the people together, exhorted them to conclude a peace wth them of Pyros, to be with them in alliance: wherunto they accorded, and the name of Pieria was euer after in so honorable a remembrance, that all honest women bled for a prouerbe, to wyshe so to be loued, as Phrygius loued Pieria.

Lying in his crabell, bees were founden to bring honny into his mouth, without hurting the chyld: whiche diuynours did interpret, to signifie, that from him shoulde flowe eloquence moste swete and delectable. Socrates dreamed, the night before he was brought to him to be instructed, that he helde betwene his knees a whyte cygnat, who hauinge feathers quickly growen, flew by towarde heauen, and filled the ayre with moste swete tunes: So the daye after, Plato being brought by his father, Socrates beholdinge hym well, sayed: This is the byrde, whose ymage I behelde the laste nyght. His name was firste ~~Aristocles~~ ~~and~~ ~~after~~ ~~called~~ Plato, because (as some suppose) he was boade in the shoulders: other wyte, because he had a boade visage. In his youth he exercised wrestling and other seates of activitie: and tyll tyll he was. xx. yeres olde, he gaue himselfe to make amorous verses, which, after he came to heare Socrates, he threwe into the fyre and burned, and than moste ardently and attentue-ly hearde Socrates doctrine, durynge the tyme that he lyued. After that, he not onely hearde the moste famous philosophers and Geometricalians in Grece, but also wente into Italy, into Affrike and Aegypt, to here the mysticall sciences. And it is thought, that he hearde some of the prophetes, sence there bee founden in his wozkes sentences not abhorrynge from our catholike faith. He was experte in martiall affaires, for he had fought in thre great battayles. He chose a place by Athens, called Academia, where he taught: and therefore his disciples weare called Academici. There was in him a meruailous sharpenesse of witte, with an incomparable dexteritee in disputynge, and makynge of aunsweres: his constancie, temperaunce and grauitie, with courtesie in language, weare of all other incomparable: he was so desirous of knowlage, that he was no lesse studious to learne, then he was to teache. Wherefore beinge scozned of one, whiche asked of him, howe longe he woulde be a scholer, so longe (sayde he) as I repente not to be wylter and better. He is called diuinus Plato, for his excellent doctrine, whiche contemeth many thinges (as saint Augustine saith) whiche accorde with holy scripture: so that therein is percepued the first parte of Genesis, vnto Spiritus domini ferebat in superas quas, and the miserie of thre persons in diuinitie is there expresse. He died waiting, of the age of. Si. yeres, before the incarnatiō of Christ. 342. yeres. Reade moze of him in Dionysius.

Pompeius, Called Magnus for his incomparable victories (whose father was called Pompeius Strabo) had so good a grace in his visage, that from his childehode, he meued the people of Rome mosse entirely to fauour him for his singular beneuolence, continence of lypynge, martiall expertise and knowlage, pleasantnesse of speche, singulite of maners, and easinesse in sprayng to. He neuer requyred any thynge without shamefastnes, nor graunted any thyng but with a glad countenance: in his visage appered alwaye both nobilitie and gentlenesse, so that in his flourishinge yowthe, there shyned in him maners both princely and reuerende. Sylla, the cruell & proude tyranne hadde him in such estimation, that where he woulde not aryse to any other mā, where he neuer so highe in dygnite, he met with Pompeius commynge towarde him, and puttinge of his bonet, saluted him by the name of great capitayne, called in latine at that tyme Imperator. He triumphed in his victories in Asie, beyng almoste a childe, not yet admitted into the Senate, contrary to the ancient order of Rome: he vanquished the valiant capitaine Sertorius, a man at that tyme mosse famous in prowesse, prohessie, beynge an erple in Spayne, and besore inuincible. He also vanquished Mithridates, the greates kyng of Pontus: and where a greatte numbre of the concubines of Mithridates, women of excellent beautie, were taken: & brought vnto him, he woulde not companie with anye of them, but sente them to their friends. He subdued these realmes, Armenia, Cappadocia, Baphlagonia, Media, Cilicia, Mesopotamia, Judea, Arabia, Colchis, Iberia, Albania, and Syria: for the whiche he triumphed, after he had tynge before triumphed for the wyngynge of Spayne & Affricke. In this triumphe, he brought into the common treasure, of golde and siluer, in money and plate. 2000. talentes, whiche if they were common talentes, amounted to .xx. hundred thousand pound: if they were the great talentes. xxvi. hundred and. xxi. thousande.

 600. xl. li. xxi. s. liii. d. in our money: besydes that was geuen to the men of warre, whiche had serued him, and that was to currey one a 1500. brassen pence, of our money. vi. li. b. s. whiche in so greate an hoste as perteyned to the co-quest of so many countreys, extended to a won-derfull summe of money, whereby may appere the rychesse of the Romaynes. Afterwarde by the mediation of the frindes of both parties, Pompeie toke to wyfe Julia, the daughter of Julius Cesar, whiche lyued not longe, and the amitie betwene Pompeie and Cesar decreased, and at the last, the insatiable ambition of them bothe braste out, the one not suffaynyng the others honour, whereof came the warre ciuile, wherein Cesar with a fewer number vanquished Pompeie, who priuily fledde by sea into Aegypte, where vnder the faulse conducte of the kyng Ptolomeus, he was slayne in a bote, his head beynge streken of, and his bodie caste on the stronde, where it was poyrelly buried, when he had lyued .lx. yeres and aboue, and from his gentle and auncient house, from his chyldehood amiable of visage, with a swete voyce and propunction, and after with hauinge a sharpe wit and apte vnto learnynge: for the diuision and partes takynge at Rome, he wente and dwelled at Athens, where the people mosse tenderly loued him, as well for his honorable vertues, as for his benefices towards them: for beynge lesse ryche by his fathers substaunce and great reuenues, he oftentimes relieved the necessites of the common people. wherefore he was there had in a singular reuerence: and for his abode in Athens, and excellencie in their eloquence, he was called Atticus. He dyd not onely with his treasure keepe the people out of vburie, but also in a tyme of scarcitie, he gaue to every citizen.

 vii. measures of wheate, called Medimni, whiche was of due measure. v. bushelles and an halfe, one pecke, one gallon, and one quarte to every one. He was beloued of every man, and he was charitable to all men. When Cicero wente in erple, he gaue him. 250000. Sestertios, whiche as mounteth of our money to M. xli. li. xxi. s. liii. d.
 Sylla, not withstandinge his great pryde, had him in reuerence. He mosse loued Horatius & Cicero, princes of eloquence: and although he himselfe wore aswell in the Latine tounge, as in Greke, perfecte as anye man, yet woulde he neuer practise in matters, nor woulde aske or sue for autorite. He relieved with his money contrary partes, as Antonius and Brutus, one to the other mortal enemies. He lent great summes of money without takynge of vburie, and holpe ladies, whose husbandes were banished, as well with money, as with his coun-sayle and consolation. Of Pompeie and Cesar he was equally loued, when they were enemies together. Finally, his quiet lyuing was to no man anoyauce, but to every man thank-full. His house was pleasaunt and not magnifyke, neate, and not verie sumptuous: all his seruauntes were very well learned, red well, and wrote very fayre, nor there was so simple a boye in the house, but he coulde doe bothe: the residue were artificers, suche as made thynges necessary and conuenient for his house. When Augustus Cesar mosse flourished, he made aliaunce with him for his excellent temperance & honestie in lyuing, for the which all noble men fauoured him. Also he married his wyues soune Tiberius (who was afterwarde emperor) to the daughter of Atticus, and no daie escaped that the emperor wrote not vnto him, sembla-bly dyd Antonius the emperours ennemie: such grace had he to be fauoured of all men, to lyue out of the daunger of enuious authorite, to passe his time in the mosse delectable paradise of know-lage, and to haue as well thereof abundantly, as also lyuynge sufficient for the maintenance of his estate beynge a knight, and to apde his frindes and countrey men in their necessitie.
 When he had lyued. 77. yeres, he dyed of a fittu-la, with a wonderfull patience, and voluntary abstinence, and was buried at Rome, all good men folowynge the corps, & the people and all other lamenting. He wrote diuers excellent wokes in Greke & Latine, which are perished, to the inestimable detrimente of them that be au-dioules.

Romulus, As the Romayne storyes asseyme, the son of Mars, by Rhea the daughter of Numitor, but moze verily the sonne of Amulius his great vnkle, who, of purpose caused Rhea in the darke, beyng a virgine Vestale, to haue a quarel to put hir to death. For kynge Numitor had a brother named Amulius, of nature wicked, fierse, and cruell, who, not beyng contente to take the kyngdome from his elder brother, and cast him in prison, yd also murder his sonne Lausus, and vnder coulour of honour made his daughter Rhea a virgine Vestale vnder the bond of perpetuall chastite, that she might not haue any issue. But she beyng afterwarde founde with childe by Mars, (as the Romaynes would haue men beleue) was deliuered of two sonnes: whiche Amulius commaunded to be caste into Tyber, and theyr mother, accorpyng to the laue of the Vestales, to be buryed quicke.
As it happened at that tyme, the ryuer of Tyber was swollen ouer the bankes, so that men coulde not come to the depe of the chanell. Wherefore they that had the charge of drownyng the chylde, caste them into the lande flosse, where the water sodenly fallynge, leste them alyue, and so weare they founde by Fau-stulus the kynges shephearde, who broughte them home to be kept and nourished of his wyfe Laurentia, whiche, because she was a strumpette, was named of the shepheardes Lupetia. Wherof rose the fable, that the founders of the Romaine citie were nourished of a shee wolfe. When these chylde came after to age, beyng instructed by Faustulus of theyr stocke and begynnynge, they gathered together a bande of shepheardes, kyled Amulius, restored Numitor to his kyngedome, and on the mounte Palatine, where they weare broughte vp, beganne to builde them a new citie. And because they weare twynnes bothe of one age, there fell controuersie betwene them, whiche shoulde geue name to theyr newe citie. This contention so grew, from wordes to tumulte and strokes, that in the bykerpyng iacmus was slayne. Although the moze common opinion be, that he was put to death, because scornfully he leapt ouer the newe walles of the citie. Romulus, beyng then kynge alone, peopled his citie, by erectyng a sanctuarie for sauldegarde of all transgressours that would come thither: ordeyned an hundred Senators called fathers: procured wyues for his people, by rape of all the maydens of the countrey, rejoyntynge thither to solemne games and playes: ouercame the people of Centina, and due theyr kyng: vanquished the Sabynes, and people of Atemna, and receyued them into his citie, with other dyuers valiaunte actes. Whiche, when he hadde done, on a tyme callynge an assemble at the marrie named Capra, in a greatte tempestie sodaynly was gone, no man coulde tell howe: as it was thought, for his sterne gouernement murdered pryncipally of the Senators, who, to please the people sayned, that he was a god, and named him Quirinus. The excellencie of this man in his arte, howe it was esteemed and fauoured of all the Romaynes, it appereth well, in that they gaue to him for a continuall stipende, one thousande of theyr grotes for every daye: whiche amounteth of our money to syxtene pounde, thysyng shyllinges and foure pence. And Lucius Spila beyng Dictatoure, gaue to him a rynge of golde, whiche was the token of a knyghte at that tyme, as a collar or chayne of golde is at this tyme.

Titus, The sonne of Tiespasian emperour of Rome, was from his youth earnestly bent to the studie of honestie, learnynge, and noble prowes, so that in his tender yeres he gaue euident token wherto in the ende he woulde proue. And yet, euen then he did some thinges, by the suppetnesse of youth and yll company, that caused many to feare that he would hane proued both cruel, sensuall, and couetous. But, when he was aduanced to the empyre, he dyd not onely shake of those lighte companions, by whome he was misledded, but also dyd so farre passe all other in liberalitie, princely bountie, contempte of money, merite, clemencie, courtisie & swete behauiour, that he was commonly called the deyle and ouerlyng of mankynde. Of his clemencie this is notable. When two of the noble men had conspired against him, and the matter was so euidently proued, as they could not deny it, first he admonished them, and then had them with him to a common sight of shew, and there made them sitte the one on thone side, the other on the other. And, because they behelde swourde players, he called for one of their swordes, which vnder pretence of feeling how sharpe it was, he gaue it to the one, and then to the other. In so much that euen they that purposed his death, shewed themselves astonished at his manly constancie. Why (saith he) doe you not see, that royal power and imperiall authoritie is given by desene and the will of god, so that it is in vayne for any man either to hope to attaine it, or to feare to lose it. After supper on a time remembryng, that on that daye he had not done any pleasure or benefite to any man, with a loude voyce he sayed to them present: Friends, I haue lost a daye. When he had reigned almost thre yere, he died of an ague.

Wanflcet, A worthy byshop of Wynechester, and in his tyme Chancelour of Englande, of counsaile wyse, graue, polittike, well learned himselfe, and bothe in his tyme and after a great mayntainer of learning. He luyed in the troublous tymes of kynge Henry the firste, and Edwarde the fourth, in great estimation with the one, and in great displeasure with the other: and therefore felte both the sweete of prosperitie, and the sower pangis of aduersitie. In his latter tyme, when he had attained quietnesse, as a god byshop, more myndyng the increase of learning then his owne priuate wealth, to the great fur-theraunce thereof, he builded the notable house of Marie Magdalene colledge in Oxforde. Out of the whiche, as a singular nourferte of goodde letters, within fewe yeres haue been sent into the church, besyde a great numbre of other wel learned, alacur byshops: and at this daye hath trauelling in the vineyard of Chryste, and planting of his vourde, twoo godly byshops, and di-uers other zelous and very well learned. In this house because I also was broughte vp in my youth, and by the benche of the founder thereof, attayned the small portion of learning that god hath sent me, I ought and doe acknowledge my selfe muche to be bounden to hym.

Walia, The countrey of Wales on the west syde of Englande, so lying out into the sea, that it is compassed about with the same, sauping onely on the east part: where, about wherefore it is soyned to this royaume, as a portion or member of the same, differing only in name and language.
They be the remaines of the olde Britones, that first inhabited this Ilande, and by the Saracens, when they grewe here of great power, were constrained to take that parte, as the best safe from the invasion and disquieting of their enemies. This name I here put, not because I thinke it is unknowen to any English man, but to take an occasion to cleare my selfe of an vnjust and false suspicion, that by malicious and naughty tongues hath been spredd of me, as though I should not beare good mynde vnto that countrey, and that I haue wyrtten against it in a Chronicle, that before tyme I haue sette foorth. If this vntre surmyse had stayed within the compasse of the common soyte, I would not so muche haue passed for it (although I haue been manased danger by them that neuer saue me): but for so muche as I heare it is crepte to those that are both ryght honest and very iourneyfull, I am constrained in this place somewhat to touche it. What the thyng is, that particularly they are greued with, or how this matter firste beganne, I knowe not. If any shall declare it vnto me, I will be gladd to satisfie him.

In the meane tyme I proteste, I neuer had cause to hate them, and in dede doe so fauour them, as my countrey men and faithfull subiectes vnder one pynce with me. If I haue dyed any terme, that to them may seme vnpleasaunt (as in notyng the aces of Edward the firste, I remember I call them vnstable, I trust sober and wyse men will take that, as the truthe is, to be spoken vpon occasion of thynges doone at that tyme onely, and not as a propertie adnered to the people. And yet is that not my terme, but Fabian also, whom in some parte I folowed, vseth the same. Not withstanding, I thinke he ment none other wyse then I dyd, that is, to call them there, because in that one kynges reigne they sundry tymes molested hym. But that is about 250. yeres sene.

He made moste excellent workes, replenished with suche kynde of wysedome and doctrine, that to the instruction of a prince, none may be compared unto hym. Wherefoze I would exhorte all noble me to reade his workes studiously. I would god that he mought synde a translation either in Latin or English, whiche coulde expresse sufficiently the most delectable sentences cōteined in Greeke.

Xenophonius, a name, of Xenophon.

Xerxes, A great and famous emperour of Persia, sonne of Darius, in ryches and power of men farre passing all other, but in noble proues and vertue muche inferiour to his pdecessours. Fyue yeres continually he made prouision for a voyage into Grece, to reuenge that great reproch and ouerthrow, that his father, not many yeres before, had taken of Miltades in the fieldes of Marathon. Wherefoze, hauinge gathered together an armie, as some wyte, of seuentene hundred thousand, or, as other more credibly affirme, of 1000000. He conueyghed it over into Europe by making a brydge over the sea at Hellespont with his great multitude of shippes. Whough this his huge and mightie power he bare himselfe so poudely, that he did not onely thynke al men ought to obey hym, but commaunded the seas also to bee quiet, and mountaynes to geue place vnto hym. The multitude of his armie & cattayle dranke certayne ryuers drye, & at their princes commaundement did cutte downe the mountayne Athos in Thrace, that they myght that way haue passage. Not withstanding, shortly after, this mightie prince with all his power, on the sea by the Ile of Salamine fogging battayle with the small nauie of the Grecians, was discomfited and put to flight, a great part of his armie destroyed, and himselfe for his falsegarde with great feare glabbe to sit in a fisher boate vnknoien: and so with muche dishonour retourned home into Persia. Whereafter, afterward, mistrusting the hafarde of warre, he gaue himselfe to delitious & sensuall lyfe, proposing large rewarde to such as did deulse any newe fantasie of riot to please his sensuall appetite. By whiche occasion he became in great contempte with his people, and was slayne by one Artabanus, when he had reigned eight yeres.

This circle hath the name of the figures of beastes, that are imagined to be in it, to expresse the natures of the ry. signes, whiche are within the compasse of the same.

Zoilus, A malicious poete, that wrote a booke of railing verses against the noble wourkes of Homer, and therefore is called Homeromastix, that is, Homers scourge. When this Zoilus did reade his verses to the wourthy & learned kyng Ptolome, he taking therat great displeasure, at that present sayde not one worde vnto him. Afterwarde this railing poete being in great pauer, desired of the kyng some reliefe. Say (sayeth Ptolome) Homer seeth & reareth many. Therefore thou, that arte better then Homer, mayest well finde thy selfe without reliefe of other. At the last he was condemned of heinous murder, and by the kynges commaundement put to death. Of him, all malicious carpers of other mens wourkes be called Zoili.

Zopyrus, A noble persian, seruaut to Darius, which when the cite of Babylon rebelled against king Darius, and that he had made long warre, and could not subdue theim, vntwares to any man, did cut of his owne nose, his eares, & his lippes, and fledde to Babylon, sayng, the kyng had so disfigured him, because he perswaded him to haue peace with the Babylonians: whiche they hearing, made him their chiefe capitaine, by whiche meanes he afterward yelded the cite vp to Darius. Therefore Darius was wonte to saie, that he had leuer haue one Zopyrus, than twenty Babylons. Hauinge on a tyme a pome granate in his hande, a frende of his asked, of what kynde of thinges he would desire to haue as great a number, as there were kernelles in the pome granet: he answered of Zopyrus: esteeming nothing to be of so great value as a multitude of so faithfull frendes, as he had shewed himselfe.

An other Zopyrus, was excellently well sene in the science of physiognomie, that is, by the proportion of ones visage and partes of the same, to coniecture his nature and conditions. This man happening into the company of Socrates, whom he neuer knew before, was demanded of the present, what he thought of him. Upon the viwes of his countenance he gaue this sentence, that Socrates was blunt & dull witted, sensuall, and giuen to sundry follie vices. Whereat some of them, that were present, wel knowing his wisdom & vertue, derided Zopyrus: other were much grieved & displeased with him. Say (sayeth Socrates) let his judgement nothing moue you.
